About Placemaking

Placemaking is a social and cultural concept originating from the 1960s, popularized by urban writer Jane Jacobs. It advocates for the citizen ownership of streets and public spaces, achieved through collective "eyes on the street." Ontario Placemaking expands on this concept by focusing on citizen engagement with Ontario Place, encapsulated in the hashtag #eyeOP (eye/eyes on Ontario Place).

The Plan

The Action Plan focuses on Michael Hough Beach as a starting point—or beachhead—for a broader initiative aimed at preserving the trees and natural habitats of West Island, specifically Michael Hough Forest. SwimOP and Ontario Place for All believe that the collaborative efforts of communities and organizations can bring about lasting, impactful change.

Invitation

We invite members of the press, community leaders, and the public to join us in this critical initiative. Together, we can ensure that Ontario Place remains a living tribute to our natural heritage, a community gathering space, and a beacon for sustainable development.
